out and left a large sum of money in every single one of the funds of the city. How did it get there? Was it by his economy and his great financiering, or did the people vote bonds which were converted into cash and the cash put in there, and we stand under a bonded debt? That is the way that is answered. And it is so clear through his entire speech.

It is true that house roll 139 was passed, and yet that law was declared unconstitutional by the best stiorneys in the city of Omaha and throughout the state. If it was unconstitutional it was no law. We occapied our positions by the order, decree, and command of the court that we were entitled to the possession of that office, and yet Mr. Broatch says that is anarchy. (Laughter.) Then he goes on and says that we were going to have bloodshed. Now Mr. Broatch ought to be treated for moral strabismus or something worse. The fact of it is that we were in possession of the offices pertaining to the board, and he was the man who was urging on this mob to take possession of those men myself, while

He has built a store, simply to carry on his business in. Is he entitled to any credit for that? He did it purely as an investment, without any thought of benefiting the city of Omaha; yet it is true that he incidentally benefited the city. That is all that he has ever done from the time he came here until the present time he came here until the present

SOME EFFECTIVE COMPARISONS.

"Let us look a little on the other side now. There is a man, a man of means, thank God, a noble man—I mean John A. Creighton. On yonder hill stands a monument that will endure for all time, in which the children of Protestants and Catholics, the rich and poor, can go and get an education. (Applause.) That is not for private gain; that is an enterprise that he has carried forward for the benefit of this city and for the benefit of mankind. Go a little further; go over on partisan judicial ticket, especially. He said mankind. Go a little further; go over on yonder hill that overlooks the Missouri river, and there you will find another institution where the zick, the lame and enfeebled can find a place of refuge and of care in their owned for their ability and respected for find a place of refuge and of care in their sickness, and in their sufferings, no matter whether they be Protestants or Catholics, Jews or Gaptiles; that stands there as another monument to John A. "Let us go a little further on. He speaks of the time when we had a double board here of fire and notice commissioners, and he tells you that I am an anarchist—(applause)—and therefore that I am not entitled to held office here and administer the laws of the city. Well, that is very remarkable! That is a queer thing, and there is nobody else who has ever discovered it except Mr. Broatch, We were appointed under and by the law. It is true that house roll 139 was passed, and yet that law was declared unconstitutional.

Working on a Murder Case. MASON CITY, Ia. Oct. 21 .- (Special.) -- The tate is building up a very strong case against John Vacha, who is accused of the murder of Henry Buhrmaster, and who is now on trial in Mitchell county. Last March Buhr-master was found dead in Vacha's harness shop and his body partly burned, and near him, sleeping in a drunken stupor, was Vacha. It has developed that four men engaged in a drunken brawl, and about mid-night all went into the barness shop. Later two went home, and it is supposed that Vacha and Buhrmaster got into a row and the former choked the latter to death and tried to burn the body to cover up his crime
